In daily life, we live like a fragile wave terrified of crashing against the shore, defining ourselves by temporary jobs, relationships, and anxieties. We stay trapped in the exhausting belief that "I am alone." But just as a wave is nothing but water, your true nature is independent of the changing shapes of the world. The Ocean is what we call God—the vast intelligence of existence—and you are the individual wave, but your ultimate essence is non-dual: Water. And there is nothing but water.
